About the Seminar

Political culture is the set of attitudes, beliefs, and sentiments, which give order and meaning to a political process and which provide the underlying assumptions and rules that govern behaviour in the political system. It is primarily an output of social, economic and other variables. To analyse the political culture in any country, it requires the knowledge of quality and strength of the political system of that country. Knowledge is required about the direction in which the wheels of political system revolves and about the psychology and dynamics of political development that pours in. To understand the Indian Political Culture today, it is essential to understand the changing dimensions of values like nationalism, secularism, democracy, socialism on one hand and major challenges to a balanced Indian Political Culture on the other. This seminar "Rethinking Political Culture in India" will provide us a scope to understand the changing dimensions of values and emerging challenges to balanced Indian Political Culture, thereby this seminar will contribute towards the emergence of a better political system for the sake of good life for all.
